Launch of New-Look Government Business Website

The Government has redeveloped and re-launched the website www.business.govt.nz, after hearing the comments of small business owners that “nobody knew where to find [the tools and information offered by the Government]” and that they wanted “a simple, seamless way of transacting with [the Government].” The redeveloped website will be a first-stop-shop for businesses in New Zealand. It will hold all the information that a business person needs to start, manage and grow their business. Business owners will be able to find out about government regulations, news that may affect them, and tools to help them with their business.

The redeveloped website currently allows for an initial set of transactions with the New Zealand Companies Office. However, a number of other agency transactions are set to be introduced in the coming months. Small Business Minister Maurice Williamson says that the redeveloped website is intended to save small business owners time and money.
